As we creep from fall into winter, I hope you are cozy and warm, thankful for your blessings.

A recent studio painting completed from plein air resources is now on the website and for sale. The time spent sketching the waterfall was so necessary in being able to capture its vitality.

In continuation of my figure series, I had a wonderful photoshoot a few weeks ago. Going into the shoot with a firm idea of the ways in which the photos would be used made for the most successful photoshoot I've had to date.

I'm putting the finishing touches on a few other paintings in the next week, but the gears have been churning and I've got ideas and sketches in place for about five new paintings. Here's a photo from the shoot, a glimpse into the paintings to come:

I'm also working on a new portrait commission of an adorable 3-year-old (see her here). It's so rewarding to be working on a painting that will be a family heirloom.

As a part of a fundraiser for a local charity, East Nasty (an amazing running group) has asked several artists to contribute works for a calendar. I was more than happy to oblige, completing landscapes of significant East Nashville locale.
